What Exactly Is a ComicBack?

Basically, it is a neologism meaning a cartoon or comic related mass-market-sized paperback. Years ago, at the early days of the Internet, I was a member of APA-I, the comic-related Amateur Press Association Indexing group surrounded by comic fan cataloging and indexing legends like my long-missed mentor Jerry Bails, a founding father of comic book fandom; Randy Scott, the builder of Michigan State University's Comic Art Collection; Gene Reed, APA-I founder and indexer of all things DC; art spotter extraordinaire and Marvel/Atlas expert, Jim Vadeboncoeur, Jr.; comics editor and historian Robin Snyder; comics bibliography maven Mike Rhode, and so many others.

Amongst this august company, I wanted to be known for my own thing. I started indexing comic book titles "Not Ready for Overstreet", i.e. ones listed in all those 1990's comic book price guides, but not in the main Overstreet Price Guide. That turned out to be problematic as listings changed from issue to issue of these guides, while Overstreet would add some of those titles. "Not Ready for Overstreet" eventually morphed into indexing any comic book not in that price guide.

In 2001, I was going through my two boxes of comic paperbacks and discovered that no one had done anything cataloging them. And they could be found in volume, at that time, at area used book stores and on the cheap (I miss those 25 or 50 cents books!). A little bit of brainstorming later, I came up with the term for them, ComicBacks. I was clearly influenced by the internet's way of smashing words together to create new ones, right up to the capitalized letter "B" and making sure my copyright notation was all around it!

I decided to record all printings and editions that I could. I began with the obvious choices, comic strip and comic book reprint paperbacks, which are still the vast bulk of my listings. Then it became clear I needed to add new and reprint cartoon paperbacks. Then prose novels of comic characters which had been in vogue then. With a bit of mission creep, that was followed by prose novels of those proto-superheroes, pulp hero reprint paperbacks, which expanded to include new paperback stories of those characters, and then new prose novels about non-comic originating superheroes or superhero themed paperbacks. Then I added movie and TV show novelizations based on comic characters. Dime Novel hero reprints joined the list. I was adding joke books with cartoon or cartoon-like illustrations and paperback books about the history of all of the above and animation. That led to adding animated-related paperbacks and paperback comic book price guides.

Anything related to or indirectly related to comic strips and comic books or superhero-type themes got the nod. Then I began to slow myself a bit, and I still added Canadian printings because of the shared border with the United States causing things to be sold on both sides, but not United Kingdom titles. I decided not to add paperbacks whose covers were drawn by comic book artists or non-comic prose stories written by comic book authors. Even so, as I write this, there are over 9400 entries in my ComicBacks listings, with probably hundreds, if not thousands of titles and printings, to still identify and add to this list.

When I created this layout, using FileMaker Pro (the limitations lead to all the white spaces), my focus has always been on data collection, and not so much on prices the books may be valued at, but I was told books like these do not sell unless you include pricing data, which I did. This is why you will see so many entries without prices. Or with prices based off of twenty-year old data rather than today's data. So, take any pricing information with a grain of salt please. ironically, I have never sold this database in book form, and it has always been available free to a select audience of fellow bibliographers and indexers. Maybe someday I will release a more perfect edition, which all sorts of extra data about publishing quirks, how to identify different printings, the differences between the book sellers and comic book sellers grading methodologies, and other such tidbits. In the meantime, to my mind, this is just a barebones edition making the data widely available.

The source for this is a living document (as long as I am on this mortal coil and my laptop is willing) – a spreadsheet with multiple fields of data which is subject to change as new information is found. I welcome and encourage anyone's input, suggestions, data, or help. I already visit eBay for information from their sales, so I welcome any knowledge of any other such websites with data I can incorporate and acknowledge the source of. You can send me your information at CArchivist@yahoo.com. Put "ComicBacks" in the subject line and please be patient, because I don't check my personal email as much as I once did. You may also find me lurking on Facebook too in comic-related discussion groups. I would love to add scans for every book listed too.

The source data at the end of this guide lists all those places online and in book form, I got information from, and lists the people who directly helped me with information. To them, I say THANK YOU. I appreciate your help beyond words, especially to those no longer with us and to websites no longer around. The Internet Archive and its Wayback Machine notwithstanding, the impermanence of data on the internet is our modern-day burning of the Library of Alexandria or the dumping of the Baghdad House of Wisdom into the river.

On a personal level, I must give credit and thanks to those who made me who I am. To my grandmother, Inez Luukkonen McMeeken (1916-2003), who instilled into me a love of history and told my parents to make sure I was educated. To my parents, Ray Bottorff and Judith Lange Bottorff (1943-2016), who ignored the anti-comic book fear mongers of their youth and purchased for me and my brothers, Don and Jay, enough comic books to get me addicted of them for life.

Thanks to Mike Rhode for suggesting this publication and helping with its production and editing. We are a quarter of a century removed from our last collaboration together, and it has been a pleasure. Thank you!

To Charlita, Mariah, Jose, and Sarah Melvida, you have my heart always.

To all, take care of yourselves and show love and compassion to all around you. Thank you!

my best,

-Ray Bottorff Jr

Ray Bottorff Jr, a native of Detroit, Michigan, currently calls Metro Washington, DC home, and is an archivist for the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA), formerly the organization's Subject Matter Expert (SME) on Civil Rights Records. A nearly life-long comic book collector and historian, he was an assistant editor on Jerry Bails' Who's Who in American Comic Books, former Central Mailer of the APA-I, and former board member and former Board Chairman for the Grand Comics Database (GCD) - which he still indexes and edits for. Since 2001, Ray's passion project has been putting together his ComicBacks (a term he created) cataloging work. This ebook is the current cumulation of his ongoing effort.
